I don't know the climate of any one place, don't know these In consequence of the immense communications between The two metropoles of this island. The inhabitants are for the most part post-office keepers and servants. From the road men can be perceived that not always the roads break the snow for in spite of the bar coaching, they know their work very well they are getting their horses more work than with the whip.

The post carriages are constantly in use.
