Consequently therefore, whereas everyone of the other passengers was accompanied by a great many friends to me there came only Dr. With his wife under whose direction the voyage with hands and heart his ship's crew alone went away precisely at three o'clock. The weather was as beautiful as possible and the sun, which favored us with its brilliant beams, seemed to prognosticate us a happy and successful voyage. With great rejoicing we went along the river until we arrived at Green which is all but dead. Having the Thames stopped at the principal bridge in order to set off the passengers, who wish to remain at Green. Hence after the proceeding to the dock house called 'The Anchor' where we altogether gorged went off to take our respective places. Passengers in the first cabin, came in the number of 7, next three English ladies, a German, two women of the second cabin.
