A letter to me for the purpose of delivering it in my hotel, in case I ought not meet him in his office. In the letter he gave me the necessary directions as to his dwelling and the hour appointed for dinner. And living in the country all day from 10 o'clock, I was led by an Omnibus which left the hotel at 5 1/2. I found him a matter of great regret to find and he house, but in fact I did not feel the loss. In spite of this, it was not before 6 1/2 when I made my appearance. He presented me his wife, a friend, and a lady of the family, who took me by giving me a hand as an acquaintance. There were besides some other young ladies, relatives and acquaintance of theirs, as well as her brothers and a very gentleman, but by the occasion of going to England for the purpose of getting a passport. The leisure I had was particularly used with the family in occasion of these good folks, but particularly with that of the fair young ladies, with whom I was continually.
