engage in verbal intercourse. They confided me completely that the fairs are in England is very few of several places, but particularly among the Irish, who are still employed in this employment. Their character of the servant is usually analogous (to) that of his owner, upon entering the house of a new person there may be formed of early some idea of his character according to the reception and deportment (behaviour) of the servants. Just as the English ladies judge the indians nation are, as is the opinion of our hosts, who had been here in England some years.

age, and with whom all have fallen in love. They called in the family of who told themselves upon saying many good things of our sovereign, whose kindliness, benevolence, liberality generously, they and imposing were of expectation in Lord favor. They told me that every respectable family was proud than and very much pleased in receiving as a son in-law a foreigner, as well as scientific point of view as respecting manners and customs always pleased them much better than their own countrymen.
On this occasion I did in fact not refrain from lamenting at the truth and little encouraged