REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR

To the Managing Committee,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to present a report of the activities of the American School of Classical Studies from April 1972 through March 1973.<sup>1</sup>

Although the School has pursued its work along familiar lines, and consciousness of its traditions remains strong, gradual change is inevitable. Greece itself is changing, and effects of rapid growth in economy, and in tourism touch the School no less than they do our Greek neighbors; with new and expanded facilities, the School serves an ever-growing number of Members and colleagues; and new Members, no less than new staff, bring more subtle differences to the School's atmosphere and temper.

To those who have known the School over any considerable number of years, perhaps the most evident change is the absence, through retirement, of Efstratios Athanassiades and Georgios Sakkas from the posts of the business office in which they served with such loyalty and distinction for thirty-seven years. Largely through their own efforts in training their successors, Ioanna Driva and Panayiotis Asiatides, the transition has been smooth, but it is a comfort to know that both men remain nearby, ready to lend their long experience when a problem should require it. In a special ceremony in May, the Trustees added in person their own recognition of this outstanding record of service to the School.

Old Corinthians will likewise miss Pavlos Daphnis, who, after thirty-four years, has retired as manager of our excavation house. Here, too, however, we have been fortunate to find a worthy successor in Stephanos Kaloyeros, who had previously worked as assistant to the cook in Loring Hall.

With the departure of Linda Bacon, the position of Assistant to the Director has lapsed. As Secretary of the School Michael Goldstein has assumed the familiar duties of that position and added several features of his own. His attempt to foster closer relations between our students and those of other Schools was especially successful with the British and Swedish Schools, where language forms no barrier.

The Library staff has smoothly responded to the unusual demands of the year, under the guidance of the Associate Librarians Nancy Winter and Thomas Jedele and with the help of their colleague Demetra Andritsaki. In addition to coping with readers who now far outnumber the desk-space available for assignment, Miss Winter has dealt admirably with the Library of the Blegen House; nearly 1000 titles were incorporated into the School Library, while others were made available to our sister institutions, where they strengthen the library resources of Athens, and, at the same time, provide our Library with the funds necessary for special acquisitions. When Mr. Jedele leaves the School this summer he will have completed and placed in operation the new catalogue. The completion of this enormous undertaking, begun by Mrs. Philippides in 1958, has been eagerly awaited both by readers, whose work it should make much easier, and by the staff, for whom the procedure of ordering books will become more accurate.

The first trial of a system of sabbatical leaves for the senior American staff is now being made. Professor Walton left on March 1st for six months in Italy to work on his study of Janus Laskaris, while Mrs. Papageorgiou, with Professor Eliot's help and mine, looks after the Gennadius Library. According to plan, I shall be free to work on Samothracian problems next spring, and Professor Eliot will be away half the following year. We all hope that practical hazards in this system can be overcome, and that it will continue, to allow uninterrupted time for scholarship to the staff and freshness to the School's work on their return.

Friendly cooperation from our colleagues in the General Directorate of Antiquities and Restoration continues undiminished, and we continue to owe to them a large part of the success of our projects. Increasing pressure upon these men has, however, taken its toll; with salvage and test excavations demanded by the faster pace of modern construction and with a flood of applications for services from scholars and others, the limited staff in many districts can often no longer respond to our own requests with the speed and thoroughness it wishes. To avoid disappointment, I would ask that those whose work needs special access to objects in Greek collections or other help from the Antiquities Service present their requests as far in advance and with as much flexibility in scheduling as possible.

As I write, the Archaeological Service is in the process of a major reorganization, the effect of which on our work is not yet clear. As part of a general move toward decentralization in the Greek Government, the Archaeological Districts, until now dependent directly on the central administration in Athens, will be divided into 7 Inspectorates, corresponding to the 7 large districts of civil administration. Their seats are to be in Athens, Patras, Ioannina, Larisa, Thessaloniki, Kavala and Herakleion. Only the Acropolis, the National, Byzantine, Epigraphical, and Numismatic Museums, and the Ephoreias of Modern Monuments and of Private Collections remain directly dependent on the central administration. This reorganization brings with it a change of assignment for a large majority of ephors and epimelitai; few remain in their recent posts, and we may expect a short period of consolidation while each masters the problems of his new responsibilities.

I had hoped that this year would see the completion of the School's building programs, which have occupied a large part of our attention for the last four years. The new wings of the Gennadius Library were dedicated with splendid pomp on May 19th, but necessary finishing touches, as well as air-conditioning of the original building and its complete redecoration (the first since its opening), kept us from serving the public for nearly nine months until February 15th.

Also in February I delivered to the Greek State the new museum at Isthmia, built under our auspices by the University of Chicago and Indiana University. The completion of some parts of the building as well as its installation will be the responsibility of the Archaeological Service, though, of course, with our continued cooperation.

But the sudden destruction by fire of the annex at Corinth, and the generous contribution of funds to rebuild, has given us a new project. The designs are drawn and approved, and a building permit is in hand; foundations are being dug by our own workmen while we complete the difficult negotiations of letting a contract at a time when the cost of materials is rising steeply.

A dramatic change in the appearance of the School's property is the replanting of the gardens before the Gennadius Library. The plan, by the landscape architect George Anagnostopoulos, happily serves the purpose of Mrs. W. Stuart Thompson's gift, the restoration of a more formal setting for her late husband's architectural design.

A bit of new paint has brightened some rooms of Loring Hall, which has been unusually full throughout the year. Its popularity is due no less to the warm atmosphere which Mrs. Fidaou provides with so much carefully hidden labor than to the extraordinary bargain it represents, and I expect that a modest increase in charges in June as token of generally rising costs will do nothing to change this pleasant situation.

SPRING AND SUMMER 1972

In the spring, all but one of our Regular Members and several Associates took part in one of two two-week training sessions offered by Charles Williams at Corinth. Six remained to excavate during the regular spring campaign there, and others worked in Porto Cheli, in Italy and in Turkey. The revival of the School Paper, which I had sought, proved a reasonable success, and only four Members have still failed to submit one.

In May the Trustees held their regular meeting in Athens, for the second time in the School's history. They cheerfully survived a strenuous program in which they had the opportunity not only to inspect much of the School's work, but to meet many students, friends, and Greek and foreign colleagues of the School, all of which provided a broader view of our activities than even the fullest reports can suggest. We of the staff benefited, too, from fresh and constructive suggestions by those who are deeply concerned with the welfare of the School and can view it without the sometimes myopic distortions seen by those who deal with its daily problems.

The Summer Sessions were expertly led by Professors Conant and Wyatt, along familiar lines and without untoward incident. Change is, however, imminent also in this part of the School's work. Increased costs already this year have slightly overdrawn the budget, and a substantial deficit awaits us next summer: either the charge must be increased or services reduced. Less tractable is the problem of organization. Increased tourism and, more especially, the growing popularity of seaside holidays among Greeks, has in some towns hindered the booking of rooms for our groups, even at a very early date. Herakleion and Rhodes are difficult; Chalkis and Mykonos impossible. Directors of future Summer Sessions may find it desirable or even necessary to explore the often equally interesting antiquities of less crowded areas.

In addition to the work of the School in the Agora and at Corinth, excavations were conducted under the auspices of the School at Corinth (by Henry Robinson for Case Western Reserve University), at Isthmia (by Paul Clement for the University of California at Los Angeles), at Porto Cheli (by Michael Jameson, Thomas Jacobsen and Wolf Rudolph for the University of Pennsylvania and Indiana University) and at Nichoria (by William McDonald for the University of Minnesota). Supplementary work was done in Kea (by John Caskey for the University of Cincinnati), in Samothrace (by the writer for the Institute of Fine Arts, New York University), and in Phlious (by William Biers for the University of Missouri). Frederick Cooper again continued recording of the Temple of Apollo at Bassai, and began the survey of a newly discovered temple at nearby Perivolia.

FALL AND WINTER 1972-1973

A list of Fellows and Members appears elsewhere. It is again long, with more students from more institutions than ever before, nearly three times the population of ten years ago.

There are, of course, disadvantages to this situation. When it now requires two full days simply to see everyone in quarter-hour interviews, some students, especially the more diffident, may fail to receive due attention to their work and progress. But this hazard is balanced by the positive values produced by variety of interest and training among the students. Active proselytizing among the archaeologists and historians by art historians and those with literary interests, as well as the reverse, seems stronger than ever before, and, perhaps because of the unusual degree of tolerance and civility within the present group, results have been beneficial. So long as the consequences in the changing and perhaps less intimate character of the School are acceptable to the Managing Committee, we should, I think, continue to serve all qualified scholars.

The fall trips, led by C. W. J. Eliot, Charles Williams and me, included Central Greece and Thessaly, the Northwest, the south and west Peloponnesus, and the Argolid and Corinthia. As in past years, the general willingness of excavators and officials to aid us added much; we are especially indebted to Karl Scheffold (Eretria), Vladimir Milojcic (Demetrias), Pavlos Lazarides (Nea Anchialos), Nicholas Yalouris (Elis), Roger Howell (Nichoria) and their associates for lectures on their sites. Rain succeeded last year's snow to prevent a walk over the Sacred Peak of Mt. Lykaion.

During the Winter Term Professor White offered a seminar in "Athens from Kylon to Kleisthenes" and Professor Mitchel in the "Second Athenian Confederacy," while Professor Eliot and I, with the help of Professors Broneer and Vanderpool, Mr. Dinsmoor, and Mr. Goldstein devoted ourselves to the topography and monuments of Athens and Attica.

The program was enriched by a number of special opportunities. Agora Fellow John Camp undertook, like his predecessors, sessions in excavation pottery, again a popular series. Professor Eliot prevailed on several of our staff, colleagues, visitors, and members to lead sessions in museums: Professor George E. Mylonas very kindly discussed the Mycenaean collection of the National Museum, along with some of his most recent finds; John Kroll introduced the Numismatic collection, Professor Mitchel the Epigraphic Collection, A. Dean McKenzie the Byzantine Museum, Professor Vanderpool the Vase Collection in the National Museum, Professor Eliot the Agora Museum, and Miss Houser monumental bronzes in the National Museum. Others shared their knowledge in informal lectures, as did Professors Schoder, McKenzie and Starr, or in special trips, as did Mrs. Binder and Professor Vanderpool. The last also continued, with a loyal group, his habit of Saturday walks.

Fewer Members than usual will this spring take advantage of Mr. Williams's training sessions in Corinth. Some choose rather to pursue their own projects, and though I continue to believe that a brief exposure to field-work is a uniquely valuable opportunity, I am happy to say that most who chose to forgo it did so for compelling academic reasons. Four Regular Members and an Associate will assist in the regular spring campaign at Corinth, and others will work at Porto Cheli, Nichoria, in Crete, Israel, Turkey and Libya.

At least six Regular Members plan to remain in Athens another year, as do more than 15 Associates. Others return to graduate schools or teaching.

The Open Meeting has, this year, been postponed to May, for several practical reasons. In addition to my usual brief report, John Travlos will speak on "The Parthenon in the Age of Julian." The occasion will mark both his retirement from active service as Architect of School Excavations and the commencement of what I hope will be his long association with us in his new capacity as Honorary Professor of Architecture.

The Spring Term is ended, excavations in the Agora and at Corinth just begun, and we now look forward to the season of visitors from America. I trust that we may welcome many of you among them.

I should like, this year, to conclude not with recommendations but with a question which we all, Trustees, Managing Committee, and staff alike, now face in the operation of the School.

As I hope the preceding remarks have shown, the School flourishes. Its facilities are improved, and with them it serves an increasing number and variety of scholars in more ways than ever in my experience. This achievement has, however, depended heavily upon a fortunate combination of conditions, not all of which continue unchanged.

I have, in the above paragraphs, alluded more than once to increasing costs. One estimate holds a general rise in prices in Greece of 15 per cent in the last nine months, although it is not yet reflected in official figures, and there is little reason to believe that this situation will suddenly reverse itself. As my budget recommendations show, the effect on the School's finances is considerable, even with the application of severe austerity, and the burden falls unevenly, most heavily where Greek salaries are a major part of our costs.

There has, at the same time, been a noticeable change in the composition of our student membership and the use that it makes of the School's facilities. Less than one third of the students are now Regular Members, for example, and less than one half now live in Loring Hall. In consequence, the effort and subsidy spent on some services by the School now benefit one part of the membership and leave others untouched.

Such changes, both in our means and in the demands made on them, invite serious reconsideration of the basic aims of the School and the priority among them. Are our limited resources in money and time properly allocated to correspond to our aims, or should some services be curtailed and others improved? Are we providing luxury in one area and neglecting another?

I am, myself, persuaded that our policies, with their strong roots in the School's history, are basically sound as they are, and that only minor adjustments are desirable, but our services are best judged by those whose students use them, and I would welcome the views not only of the Managing Committee as a whole but of its individual members.

Respectfully submitted,

REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATE LIBRARIAN OF THE SCHOOL

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit the following report on the School Library's acquisitions for the year April 1972 to March 1973.

This year's accessions show that we were particularly fortunate, with an addition to our collection of some 2000 new volumes purchased from our regular budget. About 160 more expensive books were bought from the Lucy Talcott fund, and another 40 books came to us as gifts, for which we are, once again, greatly indebted. Approximately one-sixth of our annual budget went towards bookbinding during this period.

This year's readers have voiced a need for more books on scientific aspects of archaeology and on prehistory, publications which in the one case are rather costly and in the other often come from countries where export bookdealers are nearly non-existent. Although not all requests can be filled, in this latter case the Library has greatly profited in a number of instances from the possibility of exchanging our publications for those of scholarly institutions in countries where purchasing is unfeasible. In addition, the Publications Committee has kindly granted us permission to initiate some new exchanges for Hesperia, which has helped to alleviate the burden to our regular funds as well as to relieve us of difficulties with annual subscriptions. We are very grateful for these opportunities.

Besides the nearly 1000 additions from the library of Carl and Elizabeth Blegen, we have been able to benefit ourselves and also other libraries by selling remaining books from that collection.

With the coming year, we must face the problem of seating-space for the ever-increasing number of readers. At present we are inquiring into the possibility of installing more carrels in the stacks, and providing for the book space which would be lost by this rearrangement. Hopefully the expense will not be prohibitive and these measures can be taken before next fall.

During the last year we have had the pleasure of distributing to the other Schools and Institutions of Athens the following publications of the School: Dorothy B. Thompson, An Ancient Shopping Center (Picture Book No. 12), Alison Frantz, The Church of the Holy Apostles (Athenian Agora, XX), and Homer A. Thompson and R. E. Wycherley, The Agora of Athens (Athenian Agora, XIV).

REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATE LIBRARIAN OF THE SCHOOL

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit the following report on my activities during 1972-1973.

Besides processing and cataloguing the 2300 new volumes, Miss Andritsaki and I have continued work on the long-awaited new catalogue. Like everything else, the new catalogue has taken longer than expected. This year we finished the books, did all the periodicals and pamphlets and now are typing the final cards for all these. Soon we shall begin alphabetizing the cards and then, although there will still remain a great many final details, the new catalogue will at last be usable.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE GENNADIUS LIBRARY

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit a report on the Gennadius Library for the period April 1972 to March 1973:

The year under review is unique in the annals of the Library. Two outstanding events tell the story in brief: the dedication of the new wings on 19 May 1972, and the reception on the evening of 14 February 1973 to celebrate the reopening of the Library and to inaugurate an exhibition of drawings and illustrations by Niko Ghika.

The dedication, timed to coincide with the triennial meeting in Athens of the Trustees, was held in the West wing and was conducted with simple dignity. Hieronymos, Archbishop of Athens and all Greece, assisted by Demetrios, Bishop of Vresthena and two priests, performed the ceremonial blessing. Following this, a few appropriate remarks were spoken by the President of the Trustees, the Director of the School, the Director of the Gennadius Library, and the Minister of Culture, and at the conclusion of the ceremonies the door of the Stathatos Room was opened and Mme. Hélène Stathatos, as the guest of honor, was the first to cross the threshold. It was a stirring and memorable occasion, graced by the presence of several friends who had witnessed the dedication of the original building in 1926.

The reopening of the Library, nine months later, was greatly enhanced by the splendid exhibition of book illustrations, portraits, theatre designs and costumes, and travel drawings by one of Greece's most distinguished artists, Nikos Hadzikyriakos-Ghikas—known to the world of art simply as Niko Ghika. The reception was attended by a large group of invited guests (300 at a minimal estimate), and we are deeply grateful to Mr. Ghika for helping to make our reopening ceremonies a social and cultural event worthy of the occasion. We are also happy and proud to record his generous gift to the Library of a number of items included in the display, notably the original drawings and preliminary sketches for his illustrations of the Odyssey of Kazantzakis, his original drawings for the poems of Cavafy and for the translation of Daphnis and Chloe by Rodis Roupfos, three letters of Kazantzakis and other manuscript materials, and several books.

The West wing, which includes the Stathatos Room, showed to great advantage as an exhibition area, and by adding a new dimension to the cultural significance of the Library fully justified its inclusion in the plans for the Library's enlarged facilities. We may now look forward to the regular display of portions of our own pictorial treasures and, as opportunity arises, of occasional guest exhibitions.

In contrast to the dramatic ceremonies of the dedication and the reopening, the nine long months between can only be described as traumatic. No one, apparently, certainly not I, had imagined that the rehabilitation of the original building would take so long. As soon as the stacks in the East wing were ready, in early June, the Library was closed. All the books were moved into the stacks or, in the case of those that were to be returned to the balcony, into the attic of the West wing. The two small rooms off the East corridor leading to the stacks were converted into temporary staff offices and the catalogue was set up in the corridor itself. Then the turmoil began. Great holes were gouged in many of the interior walls to accommodate the flues and vents for the heating/air-conditioning system. When the incessant din of pressure drills finally ceased, it was succeeded by fresh shrill cacophonies from the hammering of tinsmiths. Last of all came the turn of the painters and for a time the great hall was transformed into a jungle of scaffolding. The entire interior had of course to be repainted but it was the reading room, untouched since 1926, that presented the greatest problem, above all the preservation of the gold-leaf decoration on the ceiling and architrave. Happily, this was preserved and the rejuvenated room, many shades lighter than it has appeared for some decades and freed of the temporary shelving along the narrow balcony and on the stair landings, is once again a vision of delight.

As finally to be arranged, after the Ghika show closes March 7th, six of the ten display cases will be moved permanently to the exhibition wing and the remaining four, together with our enlarged catalogue, will all be placed in one row on the north side of the reading room. This will provide space for two additional tables for readers, increasing our capacity from 24 to 36 seats. The Gennadeion Fellow and other privileged scholars will be accommodated in two of the upstairs rooms, as in the past, or in the two new offices in the East wing. Manuscripts and archival materials, which had long since outgrown the available cupboards, will now be housed in the large East room upstairs, under lock and key. With space in the stacks ample for many years' growth and with the large attic and basement areas in the West wing available for still further exploitation, the physical needs of the Library seem at last to have been fully met.

Throughout the renovations the staff continued to work productively, and despite the noise and confusion accessions and cataloguing went on as usual. Though closed to the public, we managed to accommodate a number of visiting scholars and did our best also to assist some of our regular readers who needed to consult the catalogue or check a few references. From September on there was a steady flood of telephone calls, with plaintive requests to know when we expected to reopen. Our prophecies invariably proved, in the event, to be overly optimistic but the number of inquiries made vividly clear to us the significant role that the Gennadius Library holds in the intellectual life of Athens.

In the past year and a half we have added, or redone, some seven thousand catalogue cards. In the near future these will be microfilmed and sent to G. K. Hall, as have several earlier batches. They will then hold a sufficient number, some 18,000, to issue the first supplement to our published catalogue, which should appear within the year. Needless to say, not all of these cards represent new acquisitions. We are constantly revising old cards that were erroneous or inadequate and where the corrections are substantial the new cards will appear in the supplement volume. In many more cases, where the original catalogue had only an author card, we have included new subject cards or added entries. The first supplement will represent the work of a little over four years, since December 1968. Perhaps in another five years, and a second supplement, we may hope to complete the renovation of the old catalogue and any further supplements will consist solely of new acquisitions.

Accessions for the eleven months from 17 March 1972 to 22 February 1973 amount to 996 titles (in 1065 volumes) of which 471 were gifts. An especially welcome gift was an ink and water-color drawing by Edward Lear of Suli, dated May 5, 1849, presented to the Library by Philip Hofer at the dedication in May. This is the first addition to our Lear collection since 1938 and is, surprisingly, the only drawing we have from the travels described in Lear's Journal of a Landscape Painter in Albania, etc. (London, 1851). Other notable gifts, in addition to those of Ghika already mentioned, include a complete set of Ta Nea Grammata, an important literary journal of the years 1935-40 and 1944, from George Katsimbalis, eighty-three volumes from the Blegen-Hill collection, and the literary manuscripts of the Greek diplomat and playwright Kleon Rizos Rangavis (1842-1917), presented by his grand-nephew, together with a number of books by various members of this eminent family. Thanks to a generous gift from Professor Eugene Vanderpool we were able to acquire at the sale of Phillips manuscripts on 4 July 1972 a companion volume to the collection of drawings of Athenian antiquities bought in May 1970. The present volume contains twenty-five additional drawings, some by the same hand, and, in addition, several early nineteenth-century literary manuscripts. Like its predecessor, this volume derives from the library of Frederick North, Earl of Guilford.

Our traveling exhibition of 73 Lear drawings is now at the Cincinnati Art Museum for its final showing, and after 4 March the drawings will be returned by the International Exhibitions Foundation to the Library. From all accounts it has been a great success and has served to make both Edward Lear and the Gennadius Library better known to the American public. By a happy coincidence the exhibition was at the Philadelphia Art Museum while the A.I.A. and A.P.A. meetings were in session last December and we trust that many members of both societies saw and enjoyed it. Excellent prints, in full size and color, of two of the drawings (Canea in Crete and Cape Sunion) were made for us by the Meriden Gravure Company. These may be obtained at $10.00 each from Mr. George C. Miles, American Numismatic Society, Broadway at 156th Street, New York, N.Y. 10032, or from the Gennadius Library. Catalogues of the exhibition, with black-and-white reproductions of all 73 pictures, are available from the Gennadius Library at $5.00 each. Both the catalogues and the prints make excellent presents for anyone who knows and loves Greece (advt.).

The long overdue Griffon no. 7 (Autumn 1972) came from the press in early December and has been distributed to the Friends of the Gennadius Library. Inter alia, it includes an annotated list of the temporary exhibition in the Library of "Books by Philhellenes, 1821-1831, and Greek Books, 1820-1829" that was our major contribution to the 150th anniversary of the Greek War of Independence.

As the first beneficiary of the newly-instituted system of sabbatical leaves, I plan to spend some months in Italy, beginning March 1st, and to return in early August, after attending the International Bibliophile Congress in Cracow and Warsaw, 22-29 July. During my stay abroad I hope to complete my research on the Renaissance Greek scholar and diplomat Janus Lascaris (1445-1534), chiefly in the libraries and archives of Florence, Venice, and Rome, and, if all goes well, to settle down somewhere to write. I am grateful to the Trustees for making this leave possible, and much as I shall miss the Gennadius Library I expect to benefit by the change of scene and of pace.

Finally, I wish to thank the Director and Professor Eliot for their unstinting help in supervising the whole building program and to all members of the Library staff for their perseverance and patience through many trying months. Not least I wish to thank Yanni Mantelos for his faithful service and for assuming responsibilities far beyond the call of duty.

Respectfully submitted,

REPORT OF THE PROFESSOR OF ARCHAEOLOGY

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honour to submit to you the following account of my activities since my first report.

After the visit of the Trustees and the dedication of the wings added to the Gennadius Library in late May, I went to Turkey for four weeks, spending all but a few days as participant in a short season of supplementary exploration at Anamur, a Late Roman site in Rough Cilicia, in the company of a team of excavators from the University of British Columbia. I am very thankful to the Director for giving me this opportunity to continue an association with "my" university, as I still call it. It is, I think, a proper activity of my office to have a part in some archaeological endeavour. Moreover, each visit gives me opportunity to extend my understanding of varied connections between Turkey and Greece. With the Director's continuing approval, I am looking forward to another return to Anamur for the same period this year, late May to late June.

For most of July and August, the Director was away on Samothrace. For this period I was thus concerned, more so than in any other part of the School year, with the day-to-day operation of the School's office. What with the constant comings and goings of two divisions of the Summer School, the several excavation staffs for whom the School is a base, and many scholarly visitors, it is, I confess, a hectic time, particularly so when the bookkeeper and secretary are on holiday. Even so, I was able to find time to make a typewritten copy of the holograph manuscript of Thomas D. Whitcombe, recently acquired by the Gennadius Library. This is an interesting document concerning the unsuccessful attack on the Acropolis by the Greeks and Philhellenes in 1827, and preserves many names and details hitherto unpublished.

With September and the return of the Director, I was free to take a "busman's holiday", a two week "dry run" of the Northwest, an instructive, as well as relaxing, preparation for the School trip a month later. In addition, I led the tour of Messenia and Sparta, which was blessed with ideal weather. Since Thanksgiving, the program has changed little from that of previous years. To the regular offerings we have added, however, a series of weekly visits to the principal museums of Athens. Seven sessions were organized this year in January and February; we hope to expand our "Wednesday mornings" next year to include some sessions in December.

Besides these traditional activities, I have given two public lectures, one at the Hellenic-American Union, where my subject was Turkish Athens, the other under the auspices of College Year, where, with the help of a friend, I presented a study of George Wheler, "Christian Traveller and Philosopher." As a result of preparing the material for the latter, I became aware of certain difficulties, even errors, in Wheler's published chronology. I hope to finish within the next few weeks a study of these problems. I have also contributed a short article to a festschrift.

REPORT OF THE FIELD DIRECTOR OF THE AGORA EXCAVATIONS

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit the following report on the excavations in the Athenian Agora during the period from March 1972 to March 1973.

The past year has been one of significant progress both in the excavation of the new sectors to the north and east of the old archaeological zone and also in the study and publication of material recovered during the 41 years of the Agora Excavations. It has also been a year of transition and of planning for the future of the excavations; for now as the first phase of our 15-year program draws gradually to a close, it is necessary to re-examine the basis of financial support for the project, the areas of priority for excavation, the personnel of the staff, and the archaeological aims which we hope to achieve over the course of the next ten years.

As in the past, the excavations of the last year would not have been possible without the support of the Greek Service of Antiquities and Restoration, and it is a pleasure once again to acknowledge our debt of gratitude to our friends and colleagues in the Archaeological Service. Their assistance and interest in our work have gone far beyond the limits of official duty. We are especially indebted to Professor Spyridon Marinatos, Inspector General of Antiquities, whose enthusiastic support of the excavations and whose energetic activities in our behalf have kindled an interest in the Agora at the highest level of the Greek Government. Mr. George Dontas, Ephor of the First Archaeological District, has been unflagging in his interest and generous of his time and experience in assisting the work of the excavations in countless ways. For the continued good will and co-operation of these men, and of their colleagues in the Department of Antiquities, we are particularly grateful.

The operations of the past year, both in the field and in the Stoa of Attalos, have been financed almost exclusively from the principal and interest of the grant from the Ford Foundation. The new phase of the excavations, from its inception in 1968 to December 31, 1972, has consumed fully two thirds of the Ford grant. The balance available in this fund is probably sufficient to finance the excavations of 1973 and 1974, as a result of the fact that the present campaign, about to begin in a few days, is planned on a somewhat reduced scale in order to permit final probing and cleaning of the sections begun in 1970. Because the original Ford grant will be exhausted in a year and a half, efforts have already begun to secure renewed financial support for the excavation. During the past winter, a proposal to renew its grant was laid before the Ford Foundation and a similar proposal was submitted to the A. W. Mellon Foundation. A committee of the Trustees called on both foundations, but no action is expected on either request before the autumn.

STAFF

During the excavating season of 1972, 23 scholars, working in various capacities, composed the staff of the Agora Excavations. Of these, 13 devoted themselves entirely to the work of the current excavations, while the others were involved in research on different aspects of the site. For the major part of the campaign, five sections were being excavated simultaneously in the field, and the archaeologists in charge of conducting the excavation of each section were: John McK. Camp II, Stephen G. Miller, Stella Grobel Miller, Susan I. Rotroff, and Ione M. Shear.

The excavators in the field received invaluable support from their colleagues in more specialized departments. All the architectural work of the season was in the hands of William B. Dinsmoor, Jr. who prepared the actual-state plans and many restored drawings of the newly excavated areas. John Travlos, in addition to exercising general supervision over the architectural department, devoted himself to research on several architectural projects. During the fall and winter, he also acted, in the absence of the undersigned, as Deputy Field Director and undertook the work of conservation and landscaping required after a season's excavation. Helen Besi offered able assistance to the architects and also worked steadily at drawings of various classes of objects for publication. John H. Kroll continued to have charge of the numismatic department. He was responsible for the identification of all coins discovered during the season and also found time for research on the numismatic material from earlier years of the excavation. The photographic department remained in the expert hands of Eugene Vanderpool, Jr. who took all photographs of the season's work. The work of the records department continued to be under the capable supervision of Effie Sakellarakis, through whose hands records of 1,410 new objects of all classes passed into the permanent catalogue of the Agora. Mrs. Sakellarakis was ably assisted by Lena Papachristodoulou, and, at various times during the year, by Marian McCredie, whose volunteer services are here gratefully acknowledged.

In the Stoa of Attalos, study and research kept pace with the excavations in the field, as a number of scholars devoted themselves to the publication of material found in the Agora. These included Eugene Vanderpool (ostraka), Virginia R. Grace assisted by Andreas Demoulinis, Maria Petropoulakou, and Carolyn Koehler (amphoras), Alison Frantz (post-Classical antiquities), Evelyn B. Harrison (sculpture), Evelyn L. Smithson (geometric pottery), Anna Benjamin (miscellaneous small finds), David Jordan (curse tablets), Carol Mattusch (bronze-casting material). Another group of scholars visited the Agora for briefer periods in connection with the preparation of Agora publications: Homer A. Thompson (architecture and topography), Dorothy

B. Thompson (terracottas), Benjamin D. Meritt (epigraphy), J. Lawrence Angel (skeletal material), Mabel L. Lang (graffiti and dipinti), Gladys D. Weinberg assisted by Margot Camp (glass), Ronald S. Stroud (epigraphy), John W. Hayes (Roman pottery), Ellen Reeder (metalwork).

During the period under review, four members of the staff held appointments as Agora Fellows: Stephen G. Miller and Stella Grobel Miller, whose terms ended June 30, 1972, John H. Kroll, and John McK. Camp II, whose term commenced July 1, 1972. In addition to these, two other younger scholars have recently accepted appointments as Agora Fellows to begin in the summer of 1973; Fred S. Kleiner of Columbia University in numismatics and Barbara L. Johnson of the University of Missouri to study Roman coarse pottery.

In the course of the past autumn, the Executive Committee, not for the first time in the history of the excavation, expressed concern over the nomenclature of the Agora staff. At the Committee's direction, the position of Deputy Field Director, held for many years by Eugene Vanderpool and now by John Travlos, will, upon the retirement of Mr. Travlos in June 1973, be replaced by that of Assistant Field Director. The Committee described the change in the following minute: "The Assistant Director of the Agora Excavations will be a field archaeologist of some years experience in Greece. The appointment will be on a full-time basis. He or she will act as liaison between Director and workmen, coordinate work in the mending room, and be able to make authoritative decisions generally." Accordingly, the Field Director was instructed to submit a recommendation for the appointment; and it may be reported here that, to the great good fortune of the Agora, John McK. Camp II has indicated a willingness to undertake the mandate quoted above. Although authoritative decisions and various duties of liaison and coordination may crowd his schedule in the future, it is greatly to be hoped that he will still find some time for archaeology like all other members of the Agora staff.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL EXCAVATIONS

The campaign of 1972 consisted of five months of continuous excavations beginning on March 20th and continuing until nearly the end of August. The scale of the field work may be judged by the size of the labor force which numbered 76 workmen at the peak of the season and was reduced to 45 in its closing days. Our efforts brought nearly to completion the systematic clearing of the northern sectors along Hadrian Street; and our principal forces were massed on the eastern front, where the excavators succeeded in carrying out the general clearing of a large block of land lying between the south end of the Stoa of Attalos and the Market of Caesar and Augustus.

At the northwest corner of the market square, the small classical sanctuary discovered in the late summer of 1971 was fully explored under the supervision of Stella Grobel Miller. The architecture of the little shrine was found preserved almost intact. It consisted of a square enclosure, or abaton, formed of a poros parapet, chest high to a man and set on a low poros sill. The enclosure surrounds a great outcropping of bedrock which served in its unworked state as a natural altar stone and attracted the ritual of sacrifice. Investigation of the stratified deposits which had accumulated around the enclosure enabled us to ascertain its date of construction in the third quarter of the 5th century B.C.

Excavation within the enclosure revealed a great mass of pottery and other objects which had been dedicated as part of the ritual of the cult and had been allowed to accumulate on and around the sacred stone throughout the last quarter of the 5th century B.C. Several hundred votive offerings were recovered from the sanctuary, of which by far the greater part consisted of vessels for drinking and for the pouring of libations. The best of these were a group of stemless cups in red figure, but skyphoi, oinochoai, and ribbed mugs were also found in some numbers. Many of the new finds from the sanctuary tend to confirm the suggestion put forth last year that the cult was primarily female in character. Among these may be noted several baby's feeding cups, some miniature amphoriskoi, pyxides, fragments of bronze mirrors and pieces of jewelry. None of the votives was marked with a dedicatory inscription which would permit a certain identification of the deity, and for the moment the sanctuary must remain anonymous.

Further to the west behind the Stoa Basileios, a long section was exposed of the stoa which bordered the south side of the Panathenaic Way. Excavations conducted by Susan I. Rotroff revealed much new information about the building's architectural history. As originally constructed in the 1st century after Christ, it consisted of two colonnades, separated by a median wall, one of which lined the Panathenaic Way and the other the Roman street to the south. A propylon at the east end of the building allowed pedestrian traffic to communicate freely between the two streets. The checkered history of the stoa includes a reconstruction in the late 3rd century after Christ, probably necessitated by the Herulian raid of A.D. 267, and a more major remodeling in the late 4th century after Christ, as a result of which the southern colonnade was walled up to form shops. The structure continued to be used until the great destruction during the Slavic invasions of the late 6th century. Beneath the east end of the Roman stoa, some traces of small Classical buildings also came to light. These are located immediately behind the Royal Stoa, and the light but good construction suggests that they may have been structures connected in some way with the activities of the Royal Stoa itself. This is strengthened by the discovery in the area of a great pit filled with kitchen refuse and large quantities of badly broken pottery of the third and early fourth quarters of the 5th century B.C. The pottery is dining rather than cooking ware and includes an unusually large proportion of kraters and drinking vessels of various sorts. The quality also is unusually fine and the amount of red-figured pottery is remarkable for Agora deposits. The fact that many pieces are marked as public property suggests that the dump was from a public dining room, possibly connected with the Royal Stoa; and the analogy of the various outbuildings of the Tholos comes at once to mind.

In the more easterly sector along Hadrian street, Stephen G. Miller brought virtually to completion the exploration of the area to its lowest levels. This work yielded valuable documentation for the earlier periods of occupation at the northeast corner of the Agora. The earliest remains consist of terrace walls evidently intended to retain the land lying to the south and to prevent it from eroding away into the Eridanos valley, which must lie near at hand to the north. The earliest of the terrace walls belongs to the Late Helladic III B period and provides our first evidence for Mycenaean architecture in the Agora area. A later and more substantial retaining wall could be dated to the late years of the 8th century B.C. and continued in use until the Persian Wars. Several walls and rooms of a small Archaic structure were also explored, and these showed that the area came first to be occupied by buildings, probably private dwellings, about the middle of the 6th century B.C.

Excavations in the eastern zone progressed in adjacent sections under the supervision of John McK. Camp II and Ione M. Shear. The excavators were able to explore the whole block to a general depth of the Roman levels. The principal monument in the area is a stoa, measuring some 70 m. in length, which lined the south side of the ancient street leading from the Stoa of Attalos to the Roman Agora. At its western end the building served as one of the exterior porticos of the Library of Pantainos, but it continued eastward as a covered and colonnaded sidewalk along the street. A row of Ionic columns rose originally above two marble steps at the edge of the street. Behind the colonnade of the stoa was a row of nine or ten rooms of varying sizes which were entered from the colonnade. In its architectural plan, the new stoa is integrally associated with the Library of Pantainos at its western end, and there can be little doubt that the entire complex was erected at the same time about A.D. 100.

The building was apparently damaged severely by the Herulians and was subsequently dismantled, together with the Library of Pantainos, to provide building stone for the later Roman fortification wall. Not until the end of the 4th century after Christ did the structure rise again in a substantially remodeled form and built largely of re-used material. Only the colonnade of the stoa and a few rooms at the east end were reconstructed. At a point midway along the stoa, a great new building now arose, which made use of the refurbished colonnade as its principal façade toward the street. Its massive ruins still stand in places to a height of 4 m. The main rooms were set on a high terrace to the south, behind the original stoa, and here are preserved in very ruinous condition the foundations of a great hall terminating in an apse toward the west. While the principal apartments were thus disposed on the upper level, the lower floor once occupied by the earlier stoa was now converted into an elegant suite of small rooms which has survived in good condition. Because of its location within the circuit of the late Roman fortifications, this great structure continued to be used until well into the Dark Ages, and some of its rooms were occupied continuously, with various renovations, for half a millennium from the 4th to the 10th centuries after Christ.

EXPROPRIATION OF PROPERTY

By the end of the summer of 1973, all of the property turned over to the School in 1969 and 1971 is expected to be excavated virtually to completion. With this eventuality in view, negotiations for the acquisition of more property have been in progress for the past two years. During the period covered by this report, these negotiations have begun to bear fruit. In April of 1972, the Greek Government publicly announced its intention to undertake major new expropriations of real estate, in order to make available for archaeological exploration the entire area lying between the Agora and the Kerameikos cemetery. The Greek Archaeological Service was authorized by its Ministry to commit funds within fiscal year 1972 to begin expropriation proceedings for the first blocks of property.

The Archaeological Service made clear the principles on which it would assign parts of this great area to foreign archaeologists for exploration. It is assumed that foreign participation will be contingent upon the ability of the foreign schools to meet the costs of excavation. Blocks adjacent to the Agora will be turned over to the American School as in recent years. Areas close to the Kerameikos will be assigned to the German Institute, and the remaining area will be explored by Greek archaeologists from the Department of Antiquities.

The first steps in this program have been taken during the past winter; and on February 13, 1973 the Government Gazette published the decree of expropriation initiating the legal proceedings. The properties accorded highest priority in the Government's program are two blocks adjacent to the Kerameikos and one along the north side of Hadrian Street. The latter block, no. 1370 of the city plan, includes 28 separate properties covering 5,578 square meters of land. This great block lies on the west side of St. Philip's Square and is bounded by Hadrian, Hastings, and Theseion Streets. It may be regarded as the most critical area for the further exploration of the north side of the Agora, and its excavation will contribute enormously to our knowledge of the monuments on this side of the square.

PUBLICATIONS

Further progress in the program of publications of the Athenian Agora can also be reported at the present writing. During the past year, two volumes have been added to the series of monographs forming the definitive publication of the excavations: The Athenian Agora, XIV, The Agora of Athens: the History, Shape and Uses of an Ancient City Center by Homer A. Thompson and R. E. Wycherley and The Athenian Agora, XX, The Church of the Holy Apostles by Alison Frantz. Two other publications are now in the press and should appear within the year: The Athenian Agora, XV, Inscriptions: The Athenian Councillors by Benjamin D. Meritt and John S. Traill and Early Burials from the Agora Cemeteries (Picture Book No. 13) by Sara A. Immerwahr. In addition to these, the manuscripts of nine articles concerning material assigned from the current excavations have been received by the Field Director, and all of these, within the near future, will have been submitted to the Editor for publication in Hesperia.

REPORT OF THE FIELD DIRECTOR OF THE CORINTH EXCAVATIONS

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to present the following report on the activities of the Corinth Excavations of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens.

The 1972-73 scholastic year at Corinth has been a period of radical change. This is the first complete year of use of Hill House. The enlarged and modern facilities have made a great difference in the operation and efficiency of the dig. At the same time, the complete destruction by fire of the Annex, which burnt to the ground from three to six in the morning on the third of July, has removed from the pre-war Oakley House complex the last of the old familiar landmarks. No one was hurt in the fire; almost all of the contents of the building were lost, however. It has been possible for about 75 percent of the value of the student losses to be paid to the student occupants from the insurance compensation. A new annex has been planned and is now in the early stages of construction. This will provide six bedrooms. Hill House now has three, Shear House one bedroom. The old Annex had seven.

Another change, as noticeable as any in Corinth in the last few years, comes with the retirement of Mr. Paul Daphnis, who has served for years as manager of the Corinth dig house. We here acknowledge our heartfelt appreciation of his deep interest in and attention to the workings of the Corinth plant. Mr. Stephanos Kalogyros now serves well as the cook; his wife is maid for Hill House.

The regular American personnel has not changed this year, except for the loss of Dr. Mary Sturgeon to Oberlin College. In her place we have Miss Jean MacIntosh, a Bryn Mawr Ph.D. candidate. Thus the staff this year is:

C. K. Williams, II, Field Director
S. Herbert, half-time Secretary
J. MacIntosh, half-time Secretary
N. Bookidis, Corinth Fellow (Demeter Sanctuary)
J. Fisher, Corinth Fellow (Numismatics)

Others are at Corinth only for the year. Mr. David Peck, architect for the Demeter Sanctuary, is devoting his total efforts to the production of plans, elevations, and drawings for the final publication of the architecture of the sanctuary. By August Mr. Peck expects to have completed all of the architectural drawings that will be needed. Mrs. Peck is drawing pottery profiles.

We also have the services of a volunteer photographer, Miss Marcia Langer. She has photographed the lamps for Mr. Broneer's forthcoming Isthmia lamp volume. Since Christmas she has rephotographed a bulk of Korakou pottery and regular Corinth excavation finds. This work is possible now only because we have the new Hill House photographic room, given in honor of Dr. Alfred Bellinger, facilities that previously had not existed in Corinth.

PROJECTS

Some of the Regular Members of the School have selected unpublished excavation finds as material for School papers. Miss D. Buitron has picked material from our Red-Figure collection. Mr. J. Wright has selected an Archaic poros sphinx, found originally by Mr. Broneer. Miss M. E. Carr is working with a large terracotta figurine of some artistic merit.

VISITING SCHOLARS

During the 1972 summer Corinth was host to Professor and Mrs. H. S. Robinson and the Case Western Reserve excavation team. We had, as well, a number of persons studying Corinth museum material. Among these were Dr. L. Angel and Mr. Peter Burns, who studied the skeletal material, Mrs. E. G. Pemberton the pottery from the Demeter Sanctuary, Professor K. DeVries the Geometric pottery, Mr. J. Lavezzi the Neolithic-Early Helladic pottery, Miss S. Bancroft lamps, and Professor R. Stroud the lead curse tablets from the Demeter Sanctuary. Miss Carolyn Koehler, having been assigned amphoras of Corinth types, has been given the Corinth material for use in her Ph.D. dissertation; of this she made a preliminary study this past summer. In all we had between 14 and 18 persons at meals during the summer and early fall. We look forward to the return of all again this coming summer.

During the winter Hill House has been used to near capacity. Misses J. Carpenter and D. Manzoni, both working for Mr. Broneer, used our facilities. Mr. Jeremy Rutter, Associate Member of the School, has been working from October through February with Korakou L.H. III B and III C material. His wife drew profiles of the material during that time. Mr. David Rupp, also an Associate Member of the School, studied for a number of weeks the Corinthian altars as part of his Ph.D. dissertation for Bryn Mawr.

FIELD WORK

In the course of the 1972-73 scholastic year, excavation by the American School of Classical Studies has concentrated on Classical through Geometric levels in the Roman forum of Corinth (Hesperia, 1973, fasc. 1). We had the services of five members of the School for the regular season: Misses Benbow and Mattusch, Messrs. Openo, Thalmann, and Goldstein. The final stage of excavation in the Demeter Sanctuary on the north slope of Acrocorinth has been started; all excavation should be completed here by the end of July, 1973. Professor H. S. Robinson has completed his third Case Western Reserve University campaign on Temple Hill this past summer.

At the same time, Corinth loaned the services of some of its workmen to other excavations, including University of Missouri's Phleious excavation and the Austrian School's excavation at Aigeira. One foreman, D. Papaioannou, served for Professor P. Clement's Isthmia excavation in the spring and for Professor Caskey's at Kea in the summer.

As has been the practice in the past, again this coming spring we are offering the two-week Corinth excavation training session to all Regular Members of the School. This coming season we are having four Regular Members, Misses Buitron and Carr and Messrs. Schorr and Wright, as well as one Associate Member, Miss Houser, at Corinth for the regular spring excavation season.

PREPARATION FOR PUBLICATION

The following persons are readying material for publication:

Miss J. Fisher will finish her manuscript on silver coins of the Corinth collection this coming year.

Miss J. MacIntosh will finish a manuscript on the Etruscan bucchero of the Corinth collection this coming spring.

Dr. N. Bookidis has had to start again from the beginning with her study of the terracotta sculpture because of the total loss of the original in the Annex fire. She is now starting her study of the Demeter Sanctuary architecture, aided by Mr. D. Peck. Her 1969-70 excavation report of the Demeter Sanctuary appeared in Hesperia, 1973.

I, myself, during the past scholastic year, have aided Mr. Richard Mason by working with him for a week this past summer at the Argive Heraion in his preparation of his dissertation on the material from that site. In addition, I again guided the last Fall School trip, taking the students to the Argolid and Corinthia. This year we included both Lake Stymphalos and the new excavations in the city of Ancient Epidauros. In the winter I reported, along with three other Corinthians, on Corinthian material at the Philadelphia A.I.A. Meetings. I gave a lecture as well at the Metropolitan Museum of Art about Corinthian religion. I am readying my part of the Halieis acropolis publication and have written for Hesperia an article on the 1972 excavations at Corinth, forthcoming in the first fascicule of 1973.

FUTURE PLANS

Two changes in the Corinth Excavation are anticipated for the near future.

One change is the result of an agreement with Mrs. Deilaki, Ephor of Antiquities of the Argolid and Corinthia. The School will make tests for the Archaeological Service, upon agreement with Mrs. Deilaki, in areas where building permits are requested in the village of Ancient Corinth, if the School considers the test worth our while. The agreement is to the advantage of the Archaeological Service, ensuring the protection of antiquities that might be on the building site. The School, in its turn, is able to get a better idea of the areas in the neighborhood that are worth future investigation. The test records then are also always available to the School for our use. These tests are being conducted by the Field Director.

A second change is in the concept of our curatorial staff. In the past, the growing body of material from the excavations has been tended almost exclusively by the Secretary of the Corinth Excavations. We have been very fortunate to find extremely competent persons for this position, but, in recent years, our loss of successive Secretaries to jobs in America has limited continuity in our operation. I have now invited Miss Stella Bouzaki to accept a full-time post to care for the collection, and I hope that her skill as a conservator, combined with continuous attention to the objects, will benefit both the objects and the scholars who study them. She will work closely with Dr. Nancy Bookidis, who will place her extensive Corinthian experience at the service of the Secretaryship. I expect that this new arrangement will prove highly successful and will meet the demands of the increased pace of study and excavation at Corinth.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES KAUFMAN WILLIAMS, II

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL RESEARCH FELLOWS

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to report on my year's activities at the School. It has been a very satisfying experience to participate again in the full academic program, which is different but in no way inferior to what I remember from years past. Attacks of the flu prevented my going on two of the fall trips, but with good luck I can make that up when good weather returns. During the winter term some seven students took my seminar on the Second Athenian League in which we wrestled with the chronological problems, the epigraphical evidence (especially the naval lists) and the concepts of peace, empire and self-determination in the fourth century. In the epigraphical museum I gave a talk to the school in general and have helped individual students whenever they wanted. Now that the formal session is over I am at the museum every day working on the navalia and various other smaller problems. Professor Vanderpool's justly famous "Saturday walks" have provided and will continue to provide a welcome and rewarding addition to the regular Friday trips which have become almost completely bus-borne and somewhat over-crowded.

I am grateful to the Managing Committee for the opportunity to work again in Greece. In closing I wish to thank the Director, the Professor of Archaeology and the entire staff for the prompt, efficient and cheerful help we have received on every occasion.

Respectfully submitted,
FORDYCE W. MITCHEL
Visiting Professor

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I beg to submit my report as Visiting Professor for the session 1972-73.

The program of the autumn term centered around the longer field trips, and I joined the students on two of them, the trips to the Northwest and to the Western Peloponnesos. This gave me an opportunity to become acquainted with the students and to hear their reports. They are an excellent group this year, and I was greatly impressed both by the organization and leadership of the trips by the Director and the Professor of Archaeology, and by the training the students are given in how to study and report on a site. These trips are immensely valuable as well as enjoyable and I count myself fortunate to have been able to see so much of Greece under such tutelage.

The same is true of the day trips in Attica and the sessions on the monuments of Athens during the winter term. They are carefully planned to provide a comprehensive and thorough study of Attica and Athens. I have attended almost all of them and cannot speak too highly of their success. Regular museum visits were added this year, and have been welcomed by all of us.

I gave a series of twelve seminars in the winter term on Athenian history of the period from Kylon to Kleisthenes. We concentrated on a study of the primary sources: twelve students attended regularly and I found them a stimulating group, critical and discriminating in discussion and well prepared for the seminars in their reading of the primary and secondary bibliography given to them.

My own work has been devoted to trying to complete a study of the Peisistratid tyranny. I have appreciated the resources of the School library where books and periodicals are so easily and quickly accessible, the study sessions on the Acropolis and in the Agora with Professors McCredie, Eliot and Vanderpool, and the opportunity for discussion of problems with them and other members of the School and the Agora excavations. I hope to complete the sections of the study chiefly concerned with material here before I leave, and the remaining sections as soon as possible.

I have been comfortably housed in Loring Hall where Mrs. Fidaio does so much to make one's stay a pleasure. Being in residence has enabled me to see a good deal of the students, and I have thoroughly enjoyed their company. I have had every kindness from the staff both in Loring Hall and in the administration offices of the School.

I should like to thank the Director and all the members of the School for what has been a stimulating and productive year. The School provides exceptional opportunities for the senior members and the students who are here: its program is full and interesting, the library is excellent, Loring Hall and the dining room look after the creature comforts of life admirably, and the students are given every possible help with their academic projects. The members of the Managing Committee will appreciate that it is the efforts of the Director and his staff that ensure the success of the School, and they spare no pains to further the interests of all members.

Respectfully submitted,

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE SCHOOL

To the Director,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit the following report on my activities during the past year.

Although my term of office began on July 1, 1972, through the kindness of the Director I was able to spend the month of July finishing the work I had begun in the Spring as assistant to Dr. N. Bookidis at the Sanctuary of Demeter and Kore on Acrocorinth. For this reason my association with the 1972 Summer Sessions was limited, but I am looking forward to working closely with the Directors and members of this year's groups.

During the course of the Regular Session I performed the normal duties of the Secretary, which include attending to the routine correspondence and minor maintenance problems and, most important of all, helping the first-year members adjust to their new surroundings with the fewest possible inconveniences. Also, in an attempt to promote more fruitful relationships between the members of our School and of the other foreign schools in Athens, I arranged (with the Director's permission and help) two cocktail parties for our student-members—one with the members of the British School, the other with the members of the Swedish School. Continued contact between the participants indicates that these parties were successful and should be continued.

During the winter term I lectured to our members at the Athenian Asklepieion and led a discussion on "The Politics of the Peace of Philokrates" for one session of Professor Mitchel's seminar. I was also able to continue work on a paper dealing with the history of the Athenian Asklepieion and submit for publication a short article on the Peace of Kallias.

My first year as Secretary has been made particularly profitable and enjoyable through the patience, interest, and good humor of the Director. I am especially indebted to him. I would also like to thank Professor Eliot, who graciously shared his office with me, for good advice, and the Greek staff for making my job an easy one. I am very grateful to the Director for recommending to the Managing Committee the extension of my term to a second year.

Respectfully submitted,
MICHAEL GOLDSTEIN

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF SUMMER SESSION I, 1972

To the Managing Committee,

American School of Classical Studies at Athens:

I have the honor to submit the following report of the first section of the Summer Session of 1972.

Twenty students, twelve women and eight men, took part in the session: Constantine Bapes (Northwestern), Alice Blanchard (Fordham), Ann Criswell (Castilleja School, Palo Alto), Linda Emanuel (Missouri), Janice Gabbert (Cincinnati), Colin Hasse (Berkeley), Marla Hires (North Carolina), Donald Hoffman (St. Ignatius College Prep, Chicago), James Hogan (Allegheny, faculty), Harriet Lewis (Wellesley), Johanne Markakis (Johns Hopkins), Samuel Marshall (New Mexico), James McCrory (Vanderbilt), Alice Nielsen (Columbia), Mark Northrup (Illinois), David Parshall (Columbia), Hilary Pitcairn (Dickinson), Gisela Rubsamen (UCLA), Shirley Schwarz (Maryland), Ruth Scodel (Berkeley).

Of these one is a college professor, two high school teachers, ten graduates of college, seven undergraduates. The group was an excellent one, in many cases of high professional caliber, and all benefited from the summer. Each student gave one report assigned well in advance.

The session began on Wednesday, June 21, and ended on Tuesday, August 1. We followed exactly the schedule adopted last summer, and thus spent ten days on the southern trip, six days on the northern trip, three and a half days on Crete, two and a half on Samos, twenty days in Athens and Attica. It was an excellent idea to have the southern trip first, the northern towards the end of the session. One day could be made up if the group were to go from Crete to Samos on the same day, thus combining the two island trips into one. Four trips are somewhat tiring.

A number of scholars in Athens and elsewhere generously gave of their time and lectured to my group; without their assistance the summer would have been much less rewarding: Nancy Bookidis (Demeter Sanctuary), Oscar Broneer (Isthmia), Joseph Conant (Aphaia temple), Frederick Cooper (Bassai), W. B. Dinsmoor, Jr. (Hephaisteion, Sounion), William P. Donovan (Pylos), C. W. J. Eliot (Parthenon, Propylaia & Erechtheion), Alison Frantz (Byzantine Museum), Annetta Grünther (Samos: Heraion), Evelyn Harrison (Acropolis and National Museums), William McDonald (Nichoria), Malcolm McGregor (Epigraphical Museum), George Mylonas (Mycenae), Robert Pounder (Brauron), T. L. Shear, Jr. (Agora), Evelyn Smithson (Kerameikos, Peiraius), John Travlos (Olympieion), Eugene Vanderpool (Marathon, North Slope), Francis Walton (Gennadeion), Charles Williams (Corinth). The staff of the School was, as usual, more than helpful, and removed any worries from the Director's head while we were in Athens. I wish to thank heartily Mr. Asiatides, Miss Bacon, Mrs. Drivas, Mr. Eliot, who presided in the main building, and Mrs. Fidaos, who made life so pleasant in Loring Hall. The McCredies gave us their usual fine party early in the Session.

The format of the summer sessions should probably remain as is. At one time I thought that a week off for reflection during the summer would be beneficial, but then I realized that a week off is a week missing sites, and is therefore not a good idea. I do feel that it would be helpful if the students could be allowed to stay in their rooms longer after the sessions if such is feasible. Samos is not worth more than a day and a half, and I have now come around to the view that Delos is really the only solution. If Samos is done, however, the students should be given the option of staying on an extra day and making the trip to Ephesus. Future directors might also want to consider revamping the northern and southern trips. I have often thought that the division should be: long and discursive vs. short and compact. Hence, one might do the northern and southern trips together in one long trip, leaving out the Argolid, etc., for the more compact and intensive trip. Such an arrangement would be exhausting at the start, but would avoid long bus rides at the end of the summer. A minor matter: everything in Athens is closed on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons and all day Sunday. It is not a good idea to schedule free time for these periods, particularly towards the end of the session when students are making arrangements to leave for home.

I worry about time in Athens. Many days are spent mainly in going to and from the School, e.g., to the Hephaisteion in the morning, the Acropolis in the afternoon with lunch at the School in between. Moreover, formal instruction in a classroom situation is not provided, and some of the students are so inexperienced that such is advisable if not necessary. Introduction to battlefield sites would be better done in Athens than on the site itself. I do not have solutions to these defects, but feel that some thought should be given them. One obvious difficulty is that the School does not have adequate instructional facilities, either in terms of space or equipment.

As I said above, the group of students was a good one, and the Admissions Committee is to be congratulated. I wonder, though, about the scholarship program. Should full scholarships be granted, or should we perhaps not rather offer more but with a lower stipend? My impression is that most of the students have enough money to attend, and are not hurting for it. Is it possible that some students would be able to attend if granted a half-scholarship? Meals on the road are a bit of a problem. I feel that the School should not undertake to provide evening meals on the trips, and should either give the students a fixed amount for meals, or leave this expense up to them. It is a nuisance for the director and demeaning to the students to have to dole out money in small amounts.

These are minor matters when measured against the excellence of the program. I think that the summer was a success for the students, and it most assuredly was for me, the Director.

Respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM F. WYATT, JR.
Director, Summer Session I, 1972

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF SUMMER SESSION II, 1972

To the Managing Committee and the Director, American School of Classical Studies:

I have the honor and gratification to submit the following report of the second section of the Summer Session of 1972.

Twenty members participated in the entire program: Mr. John T. Anderson (Berkeley), Mr. Mark A. Barnard (Stanford), Professor Voorhis T. Cantrell (Faculty, Lebanon Valley College), Miss Linda Ann Cocklin (Stanford), Miss Nancy Ann Finlay (Smith A.B., Staff, Trinity College), Mr. Edward Monroe Harris III (Stanford), Ms. Kathryn M. Jenkes (Faculty, Cinnaminson H. S., Cinnaminson, N. J.), Professor James H. Joy (Faculty, Howard University), Miss Katherine M. Keene (Faculty, High Point H. S., Beltsville, Md.), Miss Lisa Kuchman (Bryn Mawr), Miss Ellen I. McGrew (UCLA), Miss Maria L. Mitchell (Princeton), Mr. Louis Peragallo (Brown), Mrs. Marion G. Sharpe (Librarianship, San Jose State College), Miss Jolie T. Siebold (Faculty, Oak Creek H. S., Milwaukee, Wis.), Professor Robert F. Stampfli (Faculty, Texas Tech University), Mr. William E. Stevenson (Johns Hopkins), Mrs. Patricia J. Tompkins (Faculty, Farmington H. S., Farmington, Mich.), Miss Mary Catherine Twiss (Queens University, Toronto), Mr. Edward H. Zaleski (Brown). Miss Cocklin and Mr. Zaleski had been at the Intercollegiate Center in Rome during the spring, and Miss McGrew and Miss Mitchell had worked with Professor Clement at Isthmia during the same period.

Of these participants nine were men and eleven women; seven were undergraduates, six were graduate students at one level or another, four were secondary school teachers, and three were college or university teachers. There was the usual disparity of preparation (perhaps not as marked as in some past years), but there was also unflagging enthusiasm and industry to compensate. There was little illness, and that transitory, to slow the inexorable march of the Summer Session. Each student prepared and presented reports on two sites or monuments, and the reports were uniformly good and well prepared, some of them excellent.

The program was comparable to past summer programs and coordinated with that of the 1972 Summer Session, Group I. This year the innovation of Samos as a separate trip was repeated. Apart from that novelty, the season included the customary Peloponnese trip (ten days), Crete (three days), and Central Greece (six days). Summer Session II began on Wednesday, 28 June 1972, and ended on Tuesday, 8 August 1972. Six students took the final examination, and all did very well.

Coordination between Group I and Group II has become a little more binding, because it has become desirable to make the stays on Crete and (this year) on Samos conterminous. This arrangement facilitated the scheduling of hotel, bus, and airline reservations, and the effect on the remainder of the schedule was not really troubling. The one questionable item is, to this Director, Samos, an extremely interesting place but uneconomical in the sense that too much time has to be allotted, for mechanical reasons, to see what deserves to be seen. This Director had no significant difficulties with bus, hotel, or airline.

The members of Group II were housed, as they have been in past years, in Loring Hall, and as in past years the tendance of the staff of Loring Hall, from Mrs. Fidao down, was unexceptionable. The meals were good, as varied as possible, and served in the customary civilized manner. Tea was abundant. Provisions in the Library, now mercifully air-conditioned, were excellent. Generous (perhaps too generous) allowance was made for xeroxing of plans for school trips. The customary assistance was generously provided by Mrs. Drivas and by Mr. Asiatides. The constant readiness of Miss Linda Bacon to help with problems made the summer much easier.

As always, the success of the Summer Session owes an extraordinary debt to those generous scholars who have been willing in the midst of other duties to speak to the students of the Summer Session, almost upon demand, and it is a marked pleasure here to record the indebtedness and gratitude of both the Director and the students: Robert Avila of the German Institute (Tiryns), Paul A. Clement (Isthmia), Frederick Cooper (Bassai), William B. Dinsmoor, Jr. (Hephaisteion and Sounion), William P. Donovan (Rizomylo), C. W. J. Eliot (Parthenon and Erechtheion), Alison Frantz (Byzantine Museum), Annette Grünther of the German Institute (Heraion on Samos), Evelyn B. Harrison (Acropolis Museum and National Museum), Ulrich Jansen (Tunnel of Eupalinos), William A. McDonald (Rizomylo), Malcolm McGregor (Epigraphical Museum), Robert Pounder (Brauron), Henry S. Robinson (Corinth), T. Leslie Shear, Jr. (Agora, two lectures), Evelyn L. Smithson (Kerameikos and Peiraieus), John Travlos (Olympieion), Eugene Vanderpool (Marathon), Francis R. Walton (Gennadius Library), and Charles K. Williams (Corinth). Professors Eliot and Vanderpool were always ready with wise and learned counsel, and the Director expresses his gratitude to them. Professor and Mrs. McCredie, as in past years, by their gracious reception made it possible for the students of Summer Session II to meet under the most agreeable circumstances the other members of the scholarly community at the American School of Classical Studies, and the Director here expresses his own gratitude and that of the students.

It would be boorish not to note with gratitude, again that of the students as well as of the Director, the warm and helpful, nay, indispensable, presence of Olympia Conant, who arranged picnics with a high hand and banished many problems.

Respectfully submitted,
JOSEPH M. CONANT

The Committee is determined if at all possible to eliminate the present three-month delay in the appearance of Hesperia fascicules and to that end requests an appropriation for five issues in the next fiscal year.

The subscriptions have continued to increase, now including 850 paid, 100 exchanged, and 38 free. The Committee with reluctance decided the price must be increased from $10.00 to $15.00 for domestic and Canadian subscribers; the customary $1.00 surcharge for foreign subscribers will be maintained as it still covers the additional postage. The new price will be effective when the bills are sent out in the fall of 1973 for the 1974 volume.

The work of compiling the General Index for Volumes XLI-L has been undertaken by Martha Wiencke, while John S. Traill continues to provide the Epigraphical Index which appears annually. The Committee is investigating the best methods for publishing the General Index for Volumes XXI-XL already prepared by Mary Campbell Roebuck and Suzanne and John H. Young, together with the Epigraphical Index for these volumes which was prepared by Benjamin D. Meritt and published annually.

The manuscript by John S. Traill on The Political Organization of Attica is being published as Hesperia, Supplement XIV and is now in galley. Subventions of $2000 each have been granted by the Department of the Classics, Harvard University and by the Humanities Research Council of Canada.

The manuscript by Stephen V. Tracy on The Lettering of an Athenian Mason has been accepted for publication as Hesperia, Supplement XV. A subvention of $1500 has been granted by the Department of the Classics, Harvard University. Additional funds have been requested in the 1972-73 budget to meet the estimated cost of $8000.

BOOKS

Athenian Agora, XIV, The Agora of Athens by Homer A. Thompson and R. E. Wycherley appeared last fall. It was published in a double edition of 2000 volumes in anticipation of a greater demand and already nearly a quarter of the edition is gone, recovering more than a third of the total production cost of $29,423.11.

Despite the technical difficulties involved in printing the text and comprehensive index, work continues steadily on Athenian Agora, XV, Inscriptions, The Athenian Councillors by Benjamin D. Meritt and John S. Traill. The galley has largely been completed, thanks to the continued efforts of Benjamin D. and Lucy Shoe Meritt, who have generously volunteered to see the project through to completion this year.

Steady progress is also being made on Athenian Agora, XVII, Inscriptions, The Funerary Monuments by Donald W. Bradeen. The corrected galley has been returned to the printer and the volume may be expected to appear before the end of 1973.

Isthmia, II, Topography and Architecture, the second volume by Oscar Broneer dealing with the excavations at Isthmia, is now in page proof. Sales of Isthmia, I, Temple of Poseidon, which appeared early in 1972, have yielded more than $5400.00 for the Isthmia Revolving Fund, recovering more than a third of the total cost of that volume. Additional contributions to the Fund will be required, however, if publication is not to be delayed for the third volume, on which Dr. Broneer is presently at work.

A new Corinth volume, VII, iii, The Hellenistic Pottery by G. Roger Edwards, is now in press. Archaic Corinthian Pottery and the Anaploga Well by D. A. Amyx and Patricia Lawrence should go to press this summer. The manuscript for Corinth, IX, ii, Sculpture, The Reliefs from the Theater by Mary Sturgeon has been accepted by the Committee. Funds should be provided in the 1972-73 budget for work on all three volumes next year.

In anticipation of increased sales in conjunction with those of Athenian Agora, XIV, the Committee decided to use funds from the Revolving Reprint Fund to reprint Athenian Agora, III, Testimonia, now out of print, as funds previously used for the Agora series have been exhausted. To keep down the cost of storage an edition of 500 has been ordered, with revised plans, and should be ready before summer. Every effort will be made to draw attention to the reappearance of out-of-print volumes. Sales of Corinth, I, iv and v, reprinted last year, have now returned $485.60 to the Fund.

A new Picture Book, No. 13, Early Burials in the Athenian Agora by Sara A. Immerwahr, is now in press and should appear shortly. Sales of Picture Books continue to do well and have led to the reprinting this year of No. 6, Amphoras and No. 12, An Ancient Shopping Center, the latter only two years after the appearance of the first edition of 5000. The Committee decided to maintain the new price of 70 cents for No. 13 as well as No. 12, despite steadily rising costs.

While new volumes continue to appear, many old volumes go out of print through lack of funds. The Committee is concerned that funds shall continue to be available to allow the prompt printing of manuscripts on material assigned for publication, but has permitted only the minimum increase in prices required by steadily mounting production costs.

For the preparation of this report I am much indebted to the new Editor, Dr. Marian H. McAllister. She has taken over the tasks of editing the publications and managing the Princeton office of the School with efficiency and good sense. The future of the publications can be entrusted with confidence to her watchful planning and careful daily management. Mrs. McAllister and I, however, could not have undertaken our assignments and would not have been able to navigate in our freshman year if it had not been for the experience of the other members of the Committee, and the prudent advice and instruction so liberally given us at the start of the year by retiring editor Dr. Lucy Shoe Meritt, from whom we inherited a well-run operation and a tradition of personal devotion to the job. We shall do our best to live up to her standards.

NOTES TO FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

1. In common with the practice of many nonprofit organizations, the accounts of the School are maintained and the accompanying financial statements have been prepared principally on the basis of cash receipts and disbursements. Except for the effect of the practice described below, such financial statements do not differ materially from those which would have been prepared had generally accepted accrual basis accounting principles been applied.
The School has substantial interests in certain properties in Greece which are included in the accompanying balance sheet at a nominal amount.
2. Investments in marketable securities are carried at cost, if purchased, and at market values on dates received, if acquired as gifts.
3. In October, 1965 the School received a grant of $1,000,000 from the Ford Foundation for a new excavation of the Athenian Agora. Funds not expended or committed for purposes of the grant by December 31, 1976 (extended from October 5, 1970) are to be returned to the Ford Foundation.

REPORT OF THE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

To the Members of the Managing Committee:

The annual meeting of the Alumni Association was held in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on December 29, 1972. There were elected to office

Ronald S. Stroud for Member of Council 1973-1977

Sara Anderson Immerwahr for Representative on the Managing Committee
1972-1976

After several other suggestions for the annual gift to the School were considered, it was voted unanimously to give the $500 available for new typewriters, English and Greek, for the use of students at the School. All alumni who have spent time at the School of recent years understand how constantly in demand the Alumni typewriters are and how much they add to the students' comfort and convenience. The Director, Professor McCredie, spoke to the Association very interestingly about the present state of the School and the Chairman of the Managing Committee added remarks on various projected activities.

Sales of the sets of slides have diminished somewhat during the past year but continue to help supply the needs of our universities.

Respectfully submitted,
LUCY SHOE MERITT,
Secretary of the Alumni Association
